External shape and appearance very variable; form usually rather elongate, the branchial aperture terminal on the somewhat narrowed anterior part of the body, the atrial aperture rather far back (often near the middle of the dorsal border) on a short tube which usually extends out at a considerable angle from the long axis of the body. Body usually considerably compressed laterally; in the more regularly shaped specimens the dorsal, ventral, and posterior borders are thick and rounded, but the body is very liable to distortion, or to irregular depressions, folds, or furrows which often greatly disturb its symmetry and baffle all attempts to give a description which would cover all the variations. Attachment usually by the left ventral region, but individuals vary greatly in this respect. Some of the above irregularities in form and point of attachment are evidently due to the pressure of other individuals, for the species often grows in clumps or groups of individuals of its own...
