Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Old Things and New: A Sermon, Preached in the Chapel of Trinity College, on Wednesday, December 15, 1852, Being Commemoration Day Of the memorable sayings of our Lord, recorded by his biographers, not a few seem fairly to admit of a twofold use; as they are viewed in direct relation to the circumstances which the context supplies; or as treated with reference to the more general applications of which in themselves, and apart from the connexion, they are susceptible. The verse before us seems one in which are to be traced both this more restricted and this wider meaning. Occurring after a series of parables, all of which are designed, under varying images, to shadow forth the nature and principles of that kingdom of heaven which it was the aim of Christ s teaching to proclaim and describe, and of his life and death actually to establish among men. - occurring in such a context, it may be not unnaturally regarded as a recommendation of his own practice of conveying old truths under new and striking forms, and new truths under the guise of the most familiar incidents of human life.
