Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .greater outside attention than is being bestowed upon it. There is a large extent of rich mineral country, but the population is small and many of the workings are practically at a standstill, which, if scientifically mined with good machinery, and the stone treated with modern appliances and improved processes, could not fail to give a good return upon the necessary capital. The district is a remote one, timber is scarce, and the carriage of materials, machinery, and even the necessaries of life very expensive. All these causes emphasise the necessity for railway communication. The route vid Croydon to Normantoh is the nearest, although one by way of Herberton to the east coast at Cairns is also strongly advocated. One argument in favour of the latter is the increased facilities it would offer for obtaining timber. The condition of the field has but little changed during...
