Book Description: 20th century California was a prolific hotbed of new religions. One of the lesser-known of these was the Mankind United cult. The primary reason this group is of interest is because of a sociological study by a scholar from Harvard, California Cult, The Story of Mankind United by H. T. Dohrman, (Beacon Press, Boston, 1958), which was one of the first such studies to examine a new religion. Founded by Arthur Bell in the depths of the Great Depression, Mankind United claimed that a huge malevolent conspiracy ran the world, (the Hidden Rulers and Money Changers) responsible for war, poverty and injustice. Opposing them were the Sponsors, founded in 1875. The Sponsors were shortly going to announce their presence, and put in place a world-wide utopia, based on universal employment, a financial system of credits, and an artificial language. The work day would be four hours a day, four days a week. However, in order to do so, they had to get massive support for their plan, promoted by the Pacific Coast Division of North America, International Registration Bureau. When 200 million people accepted the Mankind United plan, the Sponsors would make their move, and within 30 days utopia would ensue. Of course, there were no Sponsors, no International Bureau: the group was founded by Arthur Bell, never got much further than the Oregon border and never numbered more than a few thousand adherents, if that. The only true beneficiary of the group was Bell, who had several luxurious apartments and mansions, including a swinging pad in Hollywood on the Sunset Strip with an indoor swimming pool, a pipe organ and a secret cocktail bar (alcohol was forbidden to...
