Brown (J. Chem. Soc., 81, 373 [1902]) observed that the rate of hydrolysis of sucrose in the presence of invertase reaches a maximum and remains constant above a certain substrate concentration, but did not actually determine what this concentration was. Nelson and Vosburgh (J. Am. Chem. Soc., 39, 790 [1919]) discussed a number of curves obtained from their own data and those of Michaelis and Menten (Biochem. Z., 49, 333 [1913]) relating the velocity of hydrolysis with the sucrose concentration and showed that the maximum rate of inversion was obtained in each case at about five grams of substrate per 100 c. c. of solution. At higher concentrations there was practically no change in velocity, while with less sugar the rate was smaller. The fact that two distinct invertase preparations, used at different temperatures (Nelson and Vosburgh worked at 37, Michaelis and Menten at 25), although causing different actual rates of hydrolysis, gave a maximum velocity of inversion at identical sucrose concentrations, is very striking for it indicates that there is some sort of phenomenon which is independent of the enzyme preparation and the temperature. The Relation Between the Sucrose Concentration and the Rate of Hydrolysis at Various Temperatures and Hydrogen Ion Concentrations. The fact that the temperature does not seem to affect the sucrose concentration at which the hydrolysis of the substrate reaches a maximum, but does affect the actual rate of the reaction...
